Good to Know

Rowing is governed by World Rowing (FISA) under a code whose core (2,000 m straight-course racing, six lanes, classification by sweep/sculling and weight) has been stable for generations; its modern story is programme rather than law — most recently the end of lightweight rowing at the Olympics after Paris 2024 and beach sprints' arrival for LA 2028, which are Olympic programme decisions, not changes to the racing laws themselves. No major documented rule change is carried for rowing.
